

Case Study

Joomla! Consulting

Situation

When the magazine for the German expatriate community in Singapore decided that the old static website needed an overhaul, they approached R&P for some ideas. The intention was to see what options are out there and what could be done to look a bit more 'newsy'. Having had a hosting partner for the website at that time who was offering very limited support for modern website management didn't help either.

Solution

The editor of Impulse Magazine discussed with R&P the merits of building a solution on the open source Joomla! system and changing the hosting provider at the same time. After identifying an ideal hosting partner for such a solution, Impulse tasked R&P with building a completely new website.

The consultant of R&P went straight to work and after agreeing on the concept and specification the implementation was performed in a matter of days. That the progress could be discussed while the old website was still alive only helped. Once the implementation culminated in a prototype, the editor of Impulse could already start producing the required content and went live with the new website right on schedule.

Success

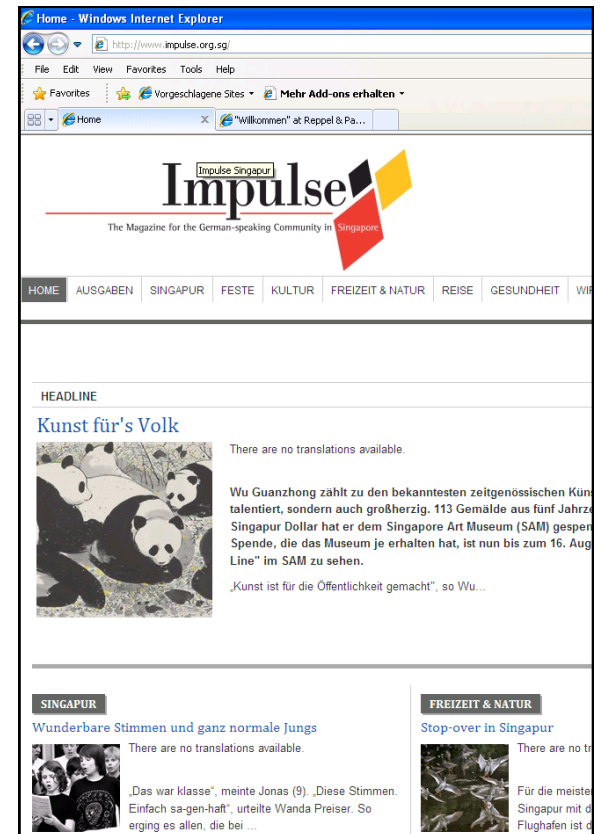

Operating a website that looks and feels like a real new page added substantial credibility to the magazine Impulse. Keeping the cost of implementation low was one achievement the management loved to see but also saving actual money, while adding a multitude of functionalities to the website management, through changing the hosting partner was even better. And surviving a massive hacking attack in the early days of operation also proved the resilience of the system.

About our client

Impulse magazine is published monthly by German Association-Deutsches Haus and distributed free-of-charge to the German-speaking community in Singapore.

Testimonial

See for yourself: <http://www.impulse.org.sg/>

Address

German Association – Deutsches Haus
61A Toh Tuck Road
Singapore 596300

